G.A. Reisner, "The Tomb of Meresankh, a Great-Granddaughter of Queen Hetep-Heres I and Sneferuw", BMFA 25, no. 151 (October 1927), pp. 63-79
"In this scene and in the statue, Hetep-heres II has the black lappet-wig, the traditional headdress of divine beings and of the great queens of Dynasty IV."

This statue can also be seen as representing the triad of Osiris, Isis and Horus. Horus is the falcon, the throne is the hieroglyphic sign of the goddess Isis, and the king represents the ruler of the Underworld, Osiris.

These triads could also be interpreted as representing Horus, (the king), Hathor and Re (represented as the sun disc on Hathor's crown).
